Speaker

John Hunter is a Partner at Womble Bond and Dickinson law firm. He is a pure economic development attorney, as his practice is entirely focused on proactively assisting and counseling corporate clients during all phases of the site-selection process when those clients are looking to expand, consolidate, or relocate some form of company operation. John has over a 20-year track record of successfully advising clients and negotiating incentive packages of varying needs and sizes in each of these facility categories throughout the Southeast US and, more particularly, throughout the Carolinas. Having previously served as the director of economic development for the two-state, 16-county Charlotte Regional Partnership, John is able to bring a unique perspective and understanding as well as a long-established and loyal network of public and private support to his client's project needs while deftly assisting those clients navigate the site-selection process. John holds a JD degree from the UNC School of Law and his undergrad from Duke University.
